RACING FOR CANCER OVERVIEW

Racing For Cancer is a non-profit organization founded by 2012 IndyCar champion and 2014 Indianapolis 500 champion Ryan Hunter-Reay following his mother’s passing from cancer in 2009. Since 2010, Racing For Cancer has been uniting motorsports fans, teams, drivers, and sponsors together to join in the global fight to beat cancer. Racing For Cancer celebrated a successful first six years highlighted in November 2014 when Hunter-Reay and his family and AutoNation had the honor of presenting the Cleveland Clinic Florida, Maroone Cancer Center, with a $2.5 million gift. And in September 2016, the same team committed a $1 million gift unveiling the AutoNation/Hunter-Reay research Lab at NOVA Southeastern University. The Maroone Cancer Center is a first-of-its-kind facility providing comprehensive services under one roof, something Hunter-Reay could not find when he was trying to help his mother. The center’s lobby was named in memory of Hunter-Reay’s late mother, Lydia Hunter-Reay. These generous donations, combined with numerous others to smaller charities, were made possible by our partner AutoNation, Inc. and top sponsors like DHL, Dr. Pepper/Snapple Group, Butterball, Firestone, and numerous others donors nationwide. Racing For Cancer continues its mission to focus on early detection and prevention initiatives, and various childhood cancer initiatives funded by annual fundraising events across America.
